HEROISM OF HALFORD

How He Got Help for Wrecked War-ship.

The islands of Hawaii might be called the life-savers of the Pacific. For scores of times during the past seventy-five years sailors have landed here from boats after being shipwrecked and on every occasion have had reason to be thankful for the help extended to them here. The landing of the crew of the wrecked Frenchman "Comet" de Richmond" on these shores recently, served to remind one of the landing of one survivor of the United States steamer Saginaw near Hanalei and of the terrible hardships he experienced before being able to notify the authorities here that nearly the whole crew of the vessel, some ninety men, were on Ocean Island and awaiting rescue.

STORY OF THE SAGINAW.

Through some sort of misrepresentation the North Pacific Mail Steamship Company was led to believe that by the expenditure of a reasonable sum of money a good harbor could be made at Midway Island, and that this place instead of Honolulu should be used as a cheaper coaling place for their steamers going to and from the Orient than Honolulu was. As a beginning Congress voted $50,000 for the work of blasting a ship channel through the reef at Midway. The U. S. S. Saginaw was detailed for the service and on the 22nd of February, 1870, left San Francisco for Midway Island, via Honolulu. The Saginaw had on board a party of experienced divers, and all of the necessary machinery, apparatus, and stores for carrying on the work of blasting and excavating the proposed channel. The Saginaw arrived at Midway on March 24th, and after putting up the necessary buildings, the business of blasting the bar was commenced, and the first trial was considered satisfactory, fifty pounds of powder having been used in two charges, each dislodging about five tons of rock. The channel was to have been 600 feet in length with a general average width of 200 feet and a depth of twenty-four feet. On the fourteenth of May the Saginaw sailed for Honolulu, and up to the date of her loss, October 29th, had made four trips to and from Midway Island. On her last return to Midway from Honolulu Captain Seward had orders to the working party to discontinue operations, as the Congressional appropriation had been exhausted. After toiling laboriously and constantly, whenever the weather and health of men permitted, under water and in boats and scows for six months, at a cost of $50,000, they had excavated a channel near the center of the cut, about fifteen feet wide and 450 feet in length. At this rate had the work been pushed on to completion, it would have cost over two million dollars.

HEALANIS HOLD HIGH REVELS THIS EVENING

With a little paraphrasing, Byron's description of the historical ball at Brussels in 1815 would fit the scene at the Alexander Young Hotel tonight, when the Healanis and their friends and patrons join the masquerade.

"There was a sound of revelry by night,
Hawaii's capital had gathered then its beauty and its chivalry. Bright
The lamps shone o'er fair women and brave men
And all went merry as a marriage
bell."

"On with the dance, let joy be unconfined,
No sleep till morn when youth and pleasure meet
To chase the glowing hours with flying feet."

Balmy airs, myriad lights, gay music, costumes of every age and clime, light laughter, merry faces, bright eyes gleaming from the vizards that enhance the hidden charms of their fair wearers, and over all the full moon gliding serene o'er sea and city, valley and mountain. It seems a pity that the city is not full of tourists to realize what the beauties of Sunny Hawaii really are, when open air fiestas are held in November.

Long before nine o'clock the elevators of the hotel will be busy carrying masquers, in their dominoes, spectators and those who intend to join the dancers later. At nine the grand marchers will assemble in the mauka pavilion and there escort the queen and her brilliant court to the seaward throne room, the masquers winding around the roof-garden and finally making their bow before the assembled court.

Captain Berger has arranged a special program for the occasion and will fill in the time between dances for which the Ellis quintets have been engaged.

The sight of promenaders on the roof-garden amid the palms, the electric combat of the streaming moonlight, will present a sight as yet unparalleled. Everything will be on a big scale and nothing has been spared in the way of expense for the comfort of the guests.

Many tickets have been bought and the family boxes are nearly all bespoken but a large proportion of the expected crowd are known to be waiting for an assurance of fine weather which seems certain under the weather bureau's prediction, and will pay at the doors.

The Healanis seem likely to derive a benefit which has been well-earned

AN UNLUCKY FRIDAY.

Having taken on board the working party and their materials on Friday, a traditionally unlucky day for sailors, the Saginaw left Midway Island for San Francisco. It was determined, however, to visit Ocean Island, about forty-eight miles to the west, as it was possible that some vessel might have been wrecked there. It was upon this island that the British ship Gledistanes was wrecked in 1837, and that the American ship Parker was wrecked in 1842. Whalers brought the crew of the latter vessel to Honolulu. But the Saginaw on her humane mission to the island became a wreck herself. The steamer piled herself on the rocky reef of the island and during the night the crew got ashore. Some provisions were saved and some sheep, turkeys, and chickens that had been taken from the wreck were turned loose on the island.

VOLUNTEERS SAIL FOR HELP.

On November 18th Lieutenant Talbot, the executive officer of the Saginaw, and four of the crew, Francis, Muir, Andrews and Halford, left Ocean Island in the captain's gig. This was a volunteer expedition which headed for Honolulu in the hope of obtaining assistance. After almost incredible suffering the crew in the boat sighted Kauai on the 18th of December, having been at sea in a small boat for thirty days, and all of them being quite exhausted from long exposure and hardships of the thousand mile trip. After sighting the land, the wind shifted to N. W., with heavy rain squalls, during which the boat drifted away from the land. With great effort she beat up again on the night of the nineteenth.

BRAVERY OF HALFORD.

The gig, in which Lieutenant Talbot and his men took passage for these islands, had been raised a few inches and decked over preparatory to making the passage. She was provisioned for thirty-five days at half rations when she started from Ocean Island but during heavy gales a large portion of the food was spoiled by the salt water and had to be thrown overboard. At the time of the arrival of the boat off Kauai there were no provisions left except a few spoonfuls of a preparation of potatoes which was mixed with water and readily eaten by the nearly starved bluejackets. They still had about sixteen gallons of water. Under these conditions it can be easily understood that the sailors were in a frightful condition when the boat struck the breakers. In the big breakers Lieut. Talbot, Francis and Andrews, slipped over the side and drowned. Halford was swept overboard as the boat canized but when it righted again he still clung to it for some time. His returning senses told him that there was another man in the boat. This was Muir, who was in a state of stupor. Halford managed to get the gig into shoal water. He then lashed Muir to the deck and taking a tin box, containing papers and dispatches, he went on shore. He deposited the box on the beach and returned to the gig. He took the chronometer ashore and then carried Muir there, making a bed for him on the beach from old clothes he had carried away from the gig. Halford then found people, but Muir died before anything could be done for him.

The old steamer Kilauea was immediately fitted out in Honolulu to go to the rescue, arriving at Ocean Island on January 3, 1871. All of the shipwrecked mariners were taken aboard and the steamer returned to Honolulu.
